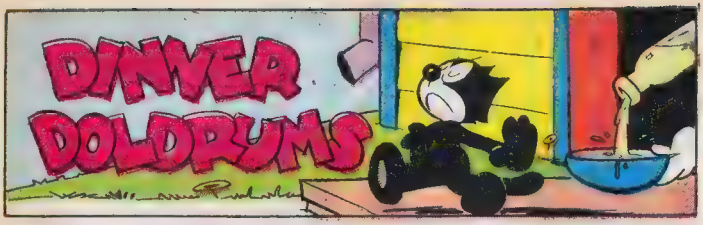
BEST OF ALL, I CAN USE MY BOAT!



The sound of the dinner-bell rang out in the clear country air. Felix the Cat raced towards the farmhouse, and went bounding up the back porch steps.

"Your supper is ready," Mrs. Brown smiled, as she saw Felix rush into the kitchen.

"Oh boy!" Felix exclaimed, "I'm awfully hungry. I hope you have a nice bowl of cream for me."

"I'm sorry, Felix," Mrs. Brown said, "I had to give you milk tonight, because we are using all the cream for butter-making today."

Felix sniffed at the milk disdainfully, and walked away.

"I think I'll eat out tonight," he said, "That milk doesn't quite suit my appetite."

"Do just as you please," Mrs. Brown said. "That's all I have to give you."

Felix walked out of the house, thinking he might be able to see what some of the other animals had gotten for supper.

A short distance away, in the barnyard, he saw Peter the Pig eating with great relish.

"Hi, Peter," Felix shouted, "Have you got anything for me to eat?"

"Sure enough, this trough is big enough for both of us, help yourself!"

"Oh! Sour milk and corn cobs!" Felix said with dismay.

"It's good stuff," Peter the Pig grunted as he began to eat again, "You can have all you want, Felix."

"No thanks, Peter, I don't like what you have to eat," Felix said as he walked away leaving Peter the Pig to enjoy his dinner.

Felix went around towards the back of the barn, near the chicken run.

"What have you got to eat?" Felix asked Ronnie Rooster.

"Plenty of dried corn and mash," the rooster answered, pointing with his wing to a group of hens who were busily pecking the little grains off of the ground.

"Ugh! That's not for me!" Felix moaned, "That's so dry it would stick in my throat."

"Well, it satisfies us," Ronnie said, "I'm sorry, that's the best we have to offer."

Felix walked towards the cow pasture. There he saw Clara Cow munching on some grass.

"Where can I get something to eat?" Felix called to the cow.

"Well," Clara Cow answered, "I don't imagine you would care for any of this grass, and I won't be milked for another four hours."

"I just walked out on a bowl of milk anyway. I wanted some cream," Felix said. "That means that I would have to wait until they separate the cream from the milk, and I'm hungry now."

Felix walked away from the cow into the fields where row after row of vegetables were planted. Felix saw the neat rows of radish, beet and potato plants; chubby cabbages, peas and corn, but none of these appealed to him. Felix kept thinking to himself about steaks, fish, bowls of cream and all sorts of nice things to eat. While he was doing this he kept walking farther and farther from home. It was almost half an hour before he came out of his deep thoughts of food. Nearby he saw some bushes with red berries. By this time Felix was so hungry that he would have eaten almost anything. Besides, his thinking about all the delicious things to eat, had increased his appetite and hunger even more.

"Those berries don't look so bad," Felix said to himself. "I think I'll try a few. After all, the birds and animals eat them."

A moment later he was picking the berries, and greedily stuffing them into his mouth. They didn't taste too good. Some of them were sour, and others were bitter. Felix didn't pay any attention to this though, because he was so ravenously hungry. All he had in his mind was to fill his stomach as fast as he could. Felix had stripped one bush completely bare of fruit and was well into a second bush before he had even begun to satisfy his hunger with the bitter tasting berries.

Nearby, some mushrooms caught Felix's eye. He was about to pick some of them when he stopped to think, "Maybe they're poisonous toadstools! Besides I have no way of cooking them even if they are safe to eat. I'll find something else to eat."

He turned to find if there was anything else he could eat.

Nearby, Felix noticed a butternut tree. Felix gathered some butternuts and ate them, not that he liked them much better than the berries, but as hungry as he was, he had no other choice to make.

"Well, I'm full at last," Felix exclaimed in satisfaction, "I guess I'd better get back home before it gets too dark to see."

So saying, he turned his steps towards the Brown farm as the setting sun reddened the western sky and the shadows lengthened.

As Felix walked along, he began to think that he would have been better off by staying home where he had a nice bowl of milk offered to him. He was not hungry any more, but he had not enjoyed the supper that he found for himself. As he approached the farmhouse, he noticed that Clara Cow was resting in the pasture. She had enjoyed her supper of nice green grass. She mooed contentedly at Felix.

Farther along, Ronnie Rooster and his brood of hens were comfortably perched in the chicken house.

"They look as if they enjoyed their supper," Felix observed with a trace of envy as he walked by.

"Did you finally find something to eat?" Peter the Pig asked as he saw Felix walking by, "There's still some food in my trough if you want it."

"Oh, I made out all right, Peter, thanks just the same," Felix answered without enthusiasm.

A few minutes later Felix walked into the kitchen and there Mrs. Brown was churning butter.

"Oh, there you are Felix," Mrs. Brown smiled, "I was looking for you before, because after you left your dinner, I remembered that I had some lovely chopped beef for you. You can have it now if you like. It will only take a few seconds to get it ready for you."

"I wish I had been satisfied with what I had!" Felix said ruefully, "I had a terrible supper, and now I'm too full to eat anything else. I guess I learned a lesson I won't forget."
